Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurRath is not a family man. The son of Handernesse, an old and honored line, he has disavowed all blood ties, disappearing into the hundred holdings which the nobility barely acknowledge. Jewel Markess is also without familybut not through choice. Orphaned at ten years of age, shes learned the hard way that honesty doesnt put food in her stomach or a roof over her head. She needs to eat if shes going to survive, and in desperation, she chooses to steal a well-off mans satchel.Raths been around. He can spot the girl a mile off. Hes seen a hundred like her. He doesnt expect her to succeedbut she does. What Rath doesnt know is that this starving urchin is seerborn. What neither know is that without her peculiar and intermittent vision, the cityand the Empire it guideswill fall to the ancient forces that are even now gathering beneath her streets. Revue de pressePraise for the House War:"In a richly woven world, and with a cast of characters that ranges from traumatized street kids to the wealthy heads of the most prominent houses in Averalaan, West pulls no punches as she hooks readers in with her bold and descriptive narrative." --Quill Quire" This story will go down as one of the best novels in its genre, propelling West into the ranks of Robin Hobb and George R.R. Martin." --The Maine Edge" West is growing into a superb storyteller, as demonstrated by this best effort to date, with a fully realized world populated by a diverse range of nicely developed characters and a compelling storyline that hooks readers in from the start." --Monsters and Critics" I really like the way West draws the characters, making them, even the children memorable. A lot of untold riches are implied here, and I'm waiting eagerly for sequels." --Philadelphia Center City Weekly Press" This is a fantastic epic fantasy filled with intrigue and mystery that fans of Kate Elliot will appreciate." --Alternative Worlds
